WEST VIRGINIA TAKES PART IN CAPITAL NEWS

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—The hearings which are being held by Sectorary Daniels at the navy department have brought back to Washing-of paramount interest.

The Maine election in all its various phases has been discussed from every viewpoint, wherever two or three of the leaders have gathered together. The Maine result, according to the prominent leaders who are here now, has demonstrated the fact that in the Pine Tree state at least the party is again united. And timid Republicans who had feared that Governor Hughes made a mistake in going to Maine that without his sane and calm exposition of national issues the results might have been widely different. On the Democratic side there is beginning to be felt the opinion that "too proud to fight" may not be a telling method of campaigning.

Such admissions from the Demo-cratic side, and such anxiety to call to the party in local fights the assistance of the president, leads one to the belief that all does not seem as fair and rosy for the Democrate after the Maine barometer has registered — as Secretary Daniels would have us believe. Apropos to the Daniels statement a prominent Republican discussing the event today, remarkled. "The fellow who inserted his nose between the teeth of his enemy and held him down, had nothing on Secretary Daniels and some others."

fact that in the Pine Tree state at least the party is again united. And, as there, why not elsewhere? They look forward with the greatest assurance to the November election, which they say, will prove conclusively that Republican factionalism, as far as national issues are concerned, has entirely disappeared. One thing stands out when complete returns are in that has struck both sides with equal force. That is, the powerful and compelling influence exerted by Governor Hughes in his speeches. It has proived to the timid Republicans who had feared that Governor Hughes made a misrelt the opinion that "too proud to fight" may not be a telling method of campaigning.

A concerted demand is coming into the capital that the president devote the final month of the campaign to a series of personal "appeals to the voters." These are pouring in from senators of doubtful states and representatives of doubtful districts, and the demand was also made by the scattering delegation in Washington this week. Curlously enough, statements made by the president and his campaign managers will be used to show the necessity for this trip.

There is a general belief among influential Democrats that the "president is stronger than his party" and "that if he had been running he would have strengthened the ticket 15,000." This is why Democratic senators and representatives will urge that the president get out among the voters. They say that unless he makes a personal appeal for a Democratic Congress to uphold his folicies, even though he is relected, the Republicans may get the lower house, thus endangering administration legislation for the first two years of his administration.

Such admissions from the Democranic factor of the president get out among the voters. They say that tunless he makes a personal appeal for a Democratic Congress to uphold his folicies, even though he is relected, the Republicans may get the lower house, thus endangering administration legislation for the first two years of his administration.
